In this weeks reading, Samuel is called by God. Samuel assumes that it is Eli from the other room calling him, and only after the 3rd time, does Eli realize what is happening, and directs Samuel to listen. How often do we get caught up in the noise and business of our lives, that we are not always able to hear the call, or when we do, assume it came from somewhere else.

I think that often times, God's voice comes to you subtly, gently guiding you and nudging you into the right path. It may not always be noticeable, but when you look back, you can see that guiding hand getting you to the place where you are right now. Oftentimes, as we are on this journey, there is that feeling of contentment, that says this is where I am supposed to be. I believe that is God's gentle voice telling you that you are doing the right things.

And then there are the other times. Where we get the loud booming voice that is unmistakable. Its a voice that you hear in your bones, and gives a very clear direction. That voice is not meant to be ignored, and there is no mistaking where it comes from. Whether we have wondered off the path, or we are being prepared for a new adventure. God's "work call voice" is only meant to be taken seriously.

Whether he is gently nudging, or making a loud statement, we must open our hearts and be ready to listen. "Speak Lord, your servant is listening," I am ready to take action and live the life you have given me. I know that I can do more listening, and I challenge us all to open our hearts to do more listening for God's voice in this new year.
